Mandalas and circular patterns are one of my favorite things to color. I've been enthralled with Angie Grace's Stress Menders (Balance, Breathe, Centered, and Transcend) series of books for months and find them what I reach for more often than anything else. I've bought at least 10 other mandala books, but none can live up to Angie's books...until now!! am so happy I came across Jennifer's books on Facebook and decided to order them. This book is STUNNING! The mandalas are unique and truly one-of-a-kind. There are some with little critters subtly hidden in the image (owls, fish, lizards, butterflies etc), quite a few with pretty little flowers, and a wide variety of illustrations throughout the book. The complexity of illustrations ranges from moderately easy (decent sized white spaces to color) to extremely intricate (very, very tiny details). There's a little something for everyone and if you're new to coloring, just pick the easy pages first and work your way up to the more challenging ones. This book has one-sided printing, a major plus! The paper is decent quality, not thick like cardstock but not too thin or flimsy either. The paper will work great with alcohol markers, gel pens, and fineliners. It should also handle colored pencil just fine, though you may not get as much layering as you'd get with slightly thicker paper. I've seen a few people post lovely colored pencil colorings from this book already, though, so give it a try! The only thing I'd be wary of using on this paper is watercolor pencils/water-based markers. The paper is thin enough that it probably won't handle the addition of water well unless you use very, very minimal water. If watercolor is your thing, just copy them onto cardstock/watercolor paper so you don't have to miss out!
