For anyone who cares about minimalism, over-the-top decoration, and outstanding photography, this is a great book. I could imagine myself happy in most of these houses. Location, architecture, art and decoration - all indicate that the clients had almost infinite financial resources, and advisors of the highest quality. As a source of inspiration for decoration, the book was useless to me: Every aspect, including architecture, art work, design and materials of interiors, is out of reach by many orders of magnitude. We don't live in a Belgian castle, don't have any ancient sculptures from China, Egypt or Rome, or grand bookcases from the 18th century. We tend to want to cook, eat and sit, entertain guests, watch TV some time, have lighting which works at night, and occasionally tackle the mess of papers/cats/plants. Any such mess would feel like a sacrilege in Vervoordt's interiors. Studying this book gave me great pleasure; I loved most of the interiors, and dreamed how it would feel to own or rent these places. I usually manage to get this type of pleasure from visiting the Metropolitan or the MOMA (and other museums). If esthetic pleasure is what you seek, I recommend this book highly.

Gorgeous, quiet, calming and inspirational. It helps to have exquisite items to deploy in beautiful rooms, but as Andy Goldsworthy has shown, even something as pedestrian as rocks can be made into art.

Effortless elegance and simplicity. An inspirational, philosophical perspective on interior design. I would highly recommend this compilation to anyone striving for an elevated, yet subtle approach to creating serene, but dynamic spaces.

Quite simply, a fantastic book with wonderful ideas and glorious pictures. Any reader will find there are interesting things that can be done by combining light and decorating.

I'm never disappointed by Mr Vervoordt! Beautiful interiors, photographs and book. We all should live so minimal yet extravagant! Maybe his best for me.

It is an adventure for the reader to be able to have a look into these interiors where space and light are the major ingredients to create a special sense of harmony. Text by Michael Gardner.
